Bridging Borders: Discussions on Migrant Healthcare

Caitlyn Tabor, JD, MBE

This presentation will delve into the multifaceted challenges faced by migrant populations in accessing medical care and explores innovative solutions, using the Boston immigrant medicine clinic as a model for improving healthcare access for migrants nationwide.

Objectives:

1. To raise awareness about the challenges faced by migrant populations in accessing healthcare in the current immigration landscape.
2. To showcase innovative approaches, such as the Boston immigrant medicine clinic, that address these challenges.
3. To discuss the role of healthcare professionals in advocating for improved access to healthcare for migrants.
4. To highlight the importance of cultural competency and interdisciplinary collaboration in providing healthcare to migrant populations.
5. To inspire healthcare professionals to explore new ways of addressing the healthcare needs of migrants in their communities.

Caitlyn Tabor is an instructor of Landmark Cases in Bioethics, Health Law, and Public Health Law. She is a licensed attorney, holding a JD from Albany Law School, and a master's degree from Harvard Medical School. She is a Neuroethics Fellow at the Harvard Neuroethics Hub and a Director at Harvard's Center for Law, Brain & Behavior. Caitlyn's professional experience spans bioethics, health law, public health, and public policy. Caitlyn is passionate about the intersection of law, ethics, and medicine and the ways in which considerations of justice in health care policy can achieve human rights reform.
