

HISB Public Humanities Fellows Lectures
Spring 2020

Meghan Buckley
PhD Candidate
English

“Combat Silence: Narrating the Female Veteran Experience”

Tuesday, March 24, 2020
4:00 PM
1008 Humanities

Students studying the literature of war embarked on an experiential learning process using the methodology developed by the Herstory Writers Workshop of Long Island to write about the experience of war side by side with female veterans. This talk will discuss the logistics of the workshop, its strengths and challenges, as well as plans for implementing this initiative into the English department in future semesters.

Meghan Buckley is a PhD candidate in English and American literature at Stony Brook University. Her research interests include 20th and 21st century American and Anglophone literature with a focus on veterans studies, trauma theory, and war literature. She is currently at work on her dissertation, which examines the function of landscape in contemporary literature of the Iraq War.

Questions? See our website www.stonybrook.edu/hisb

The Humanities Institute at Stony Brook |
1013 Humanities Bldg | Stony Brook
University | Stony Brook, NY 11794-5354

